Razor clams are large, edible marine bivalve molluscs. Pacific razor clams can be found along the Pacific West Coast from the Aleutian Islands, Alaska, to Pismo Beach, California. They inhabit sandy beaches in the intertidal zone down to a maximum depth of about 30 feet. The species has an elongated oblong narrow shell, ranging from 3 to 6 inches in length in the southern portion of its range, and up to 11 inches in Alaska. These clams are highly desirable and edible, collected both commercially and by recreational harvesters. Clam harvesting is typically authorized by state officials several times a year. A clam is located by looking for a "show," which can present as either a hole or depression in the sand. Some razors expose their necks while the surf has receded, making them far easier to spot. However, like other shellfish, they may sometimes accumulate dangerous levels of domoic acid, a marine toxin, so be sure to check current public health recommendations. Razor clams are commonly used in a clam chowder or battered and fried in butter.
