THE OREGON TRAIL (Preparing, from the DVD "The Oregon Trail")

By mid-April the praries near towns were packed with emigrant campers, waiting for the grass to grow. Heading west too early meant the grass wouldn't be long enough for their animals to graze along the way, a mistake that could be fatal. The emigrants stocked up on supplies, e.g., over 400 lbs. of food per person (flour-200, bacon-150, coffee-10, sugar-20, salt-10, etc.) A family of four would need over a thousand lbs. of food to sustain them on the long trek. A water barrel was brought for long dry stretches, but kept empty to save weight. They needed wagons to haul that much food, but huge Conestoga wagons were too unwieldy. They purchased small, covered farm wagons, since most emigrants could not build one from scratch. John Studebaker's wagon company was so successful that he later went on to manufacture automobiles.

Brains on Retirement

For all the benefits of retirement - less stress, fewer obligations, time to travel.- new research paints a bleaker picture. Without careful attention and some preventative steps, retirement may take quite a toll on our faculties. The earlier people retire, the sooner they're apt to get Alzheimer's disease, according to a study of 392 men (International Journal of Geriatric Psychology, 2010). Another recent study showed that "retirement was negatively associated with cognitive test scores over time," implying that retirees may have more difficulty solving problems and understanding complex issues. Susann Rohwedder, who coauthored a 2009 study titled "Mental Retirement," says retirement drives lowered cognition, due maybe to the common hypothesis, "use it or lose it." Working, even part-time, may help forestall decline of mental faculties. But so can mentally stimulating hobbies, like bridge, learning a new language, or tutoring, says Marc Agronin, a geriatric psychiatrist and author of How We Age. Regular physical activity and frequent social interactions can also help.

Why bridge instead of poker?...Bridge is for people who like to play cards...Poker is for people who like to bet — by watching cards.... Poker is not a card game, it's just a betting game that happens to use cards.
